

The Intersection of Energy Security and Justice

Benjamin Sovacool
(Vermont Law School)

This talk will explore the intersection of three emerging topics in the energy policy community: justice, poverty, and security. Energy justice involves how to provide a clean energy, zero-emission, zero-waste future for all. Energy poverty refers to lack of access to electricity and reliance on traditional biomass fuels for cooking. Energy security encompasses equitably providing available, affordable, reliable, efficient, environmentally benign, proactively governed and socially acceptable energy services to end-users. How do these topics relate to each other? How can they inform energy policymaking in the United States and abroad?

Date: November 14, 2011

Time: 10:00 a.m. – 11:00 a.m.

Any Questions? Contact Dr. Marilyn Brown at:
marilyn.brown@pubpolicy.gatech.edu

Location:

D.M. Smith Building
Georgia Tech
Room 303